

FOR THE INVESTOR

A dated regulatory duty, a named customer list, and one architecture underneath

The wedge is safeguarding, because the duty is already law and the buyers sit on a public register. The return is the same engine sold into older duties.

The five questions	The answer
Who is building it	Founder-led, with a contracted technology partner assigning work on creation, and counsel from Fasken and Capiche Legal
What is being sold	Transaction integrity infrastructure. The wedge is the daily safeguarding record, the platform is the same engine proving what was agreed
When the money is needed	Now. $1,500,000 across three tranches, closing the $2,050,000 pre-seed in May 2027, ahead of a $3,550,000 seed
Where the customers are	Canada. 745 payment providers on a published register, then 217,585 professionals across 4,940 firms

The gap	Why it is still open	What it is worth
The duty is live and unserved	Eleven months old, and software takes longer than that to build	Every day without a record is a gap a firm cannot fill later
American vendors do not cover it	They build for American law, and this duty has no American equivalent	The competitor is a spreadsheet, which is free and cannot answer the question
The buyers are published, and the deadlines never stop	Name, contact and registration date sit on a public register, and each firm is due three years from when the duty attached	A call list rather than a marketing budget, refilling with every new registration

Legend. Base case: 110 regulated payment customers by 2031, 14.8 per cent of the 745, alongside 40,000 paid professional seats. Market figures are management estimates from published registries, not third party research.

What the pre-seed buys is evidence, not runway.

Five reference-able customers, one signed network partner, and a first independent review passed on a 40rm export.
